Answer all two of the following: a) essential elements of a negotiable tool - form 5, chapter 1, page n. 191 b) distinction between check and exchange invoice - form 5, chapter 2, page n. 223 c) characteristics of checks and types of crossing of checks - form 5, chapter 3, page n. 221 (per feature) and page n. 224 (per type) ans: crossing is introduced to avoid the loss suffered when an open check enters. a pass is a direction for the bank to pay the money directly to the account holder's account and ensures payment. a) general crossing: the general crossing is when there are two parallel transverse lines are drawn through the check face withoutwritten words. (for the diagram, draw to the parallel cross line in the corner of the page and leave as it is.) B) Restrictive connection: The restrictive crossing involves when there are two cross lines of arallo, drawn together with adding words between those two lines such as "A/c Payee" or "A/c Payee". This type of crossing expresses the intention that the check should be deposited directly on the A/c Payee account. (by diagram, draw two parallel lines across the corner of the page and write the word 'A/c Payee' between those lines) C) Special Crossing: When the bank's name is added between the two parallel lines drawn on the check face is called Special Crossing, where a check is crossed mainly by the bank name, the amount is deposited only to that bank account which is added in parallel lines. (by diagram, draw two parallel lines across the corner of the page and write the name of a bank between those two lines.) The following answers are from Manan Prakashan Book (As for Revised Syllabus w.e.f. June 2017) Page numbers may vary for some books, in such case, the answer would be on the previous or next page.
